SUMMARY:

When a young stockbroker fails, pride makes him decide to break off his engagement. His fiancée offers him her savings, but he refuses, and leaves. She sends him a telegram, supposedly from a law firm, advising him of an inheritance he will receive if he is married by noon of that day. She enlists the aid of a minister, and they chase madly after him, as he proposes to one woman after another. They find him at the stroke of noon, and the minister marries them. She later confesses her subterfuge, he forgives her, and they embrace happily.
